“Liar, Liar... Pants On Fire”

by

Tom Holbrook

Liar, Liar pants on fire!!! That’s what it’s beginning to sound like in the sound bites we are hearing on TV between the Democratic Dynamic Duo who are still vying for their Party’s nomination. Hillary makes a gaffe about her trip to Bosnia telling the world that when she was still First Lady of the USA she and Chelsea had flown into Bosnia with sniper fire coming in and they had to forego being met by anyone at the airport because of the danger. She also advised they had to run from the airplane to their vehicle to avoid the sniper’s fire. Of course the media had archived all their TV footage and the facts showed that the plane landed without incident and that Hillary was met by a young girl with flowers and there was no danger of snipers at all.

Needless to say Obama’s camp has jumped all over her fabrication and stretched it to the max trying to show her as an extension of the way things have always been done in the nation’s capitol. Pundits say Obama is using the old adage “The Best Defense is A Good Offense,” by trying to divert attention away from himself and the embarrassment his pastor has caused him by preaching hateful, anti-American sermons from his pulpit.

Obama has done everything he could, short of leaving the church, to make people believe that he does not agree with what his minister preaches and has preached for as long as he’s been Pastor at that church. Everyone’s question has been, “If Obama doesn’t agree with the man how can he claim his Pastor is his Spiritual mentor and guide?” “Why hasn’t he left that church instead of staying there for 20 years?” “How can he allow his children, who are at that very formative age, sit under such vitriolic rhetoric as his Pastor spews forth and not worry that they will start believing what Pastor Wright is preaching?” These are all good questions, and you and I know if we were in a church with such a Pastor we would have left years ago... unless... we agreed with everything he said.

All in all, the end result has been Obama’s star glow seems to be dimming as more and more is learned about him and his Pastor. Many of those who had begun leaning toward him as the “Great Black Hope” with the potential of becoming the first Black President are seeing that he is a young man who does indeed lack the experience and judgment that someone who wants to be President of the United States should have.

Does that mean that Hillary has the experience because she was at Bill's side during his term in the White House. No more than a dishwasher in a fancy restaurant would have the same experience as the Executive Chef just because they worked in the same kitchen for 8 years. It has been said that the Clintons will use every tactic available to them to win the nomination, even though mathematically the experts say it is impossible for her to win the delegates necessary to capture the nomination. I predict some kind of back room deal to get her in and him set aside for more growth to prepare for future plucking.

Let's look at something else briefly, and get away from the election campaign. Have those of you who are proponents of the "Global Warming Crisis" heard about the new facts that have been reported that it might not be such a crisis after all? Probably not.

However, the U.S. National Climatic Data Center (NCDC) recently reported that many American cities and towns suffered record cold temperatures in January and early February. According to the NCDC, the average temperature in January "was -0.3 F cooler than the 1901-2000 (20th century) average."

"China is surviving its most brutal winter in a century. Temperatures in the normally balmy south were so low for so long that some middle-sized cities went days and even weeks without electricity because once power lines had toppled it was too cold or too icy to repair them.

"In just the first two weeks of February, Toronto received 70 cm of snow, smashing the record of 66.6 cm for the entire month set back in the pre-SUV, pre-Kyoto, pre-carbon footprint days of 1950."

Wait a minute Tom... what about all that melting of the ice in the Arctic Sea... you can't tell me that's not a clear sign of man made Global Warming! Well, I can't but Robert Toggweiler of the Geophysical Fluid Dynamics Laboratory at Princeton University and Joellen Russell, assistant professor of biogeochemical dynamics at the University of Arizona, who are both leaders in the field of establishing computer models of scientific data say that, "the computer models that show polar ice-melt cooling the oceans, stopping the circulation of warm equatorial water to northern latitudes and triggering another Ice Age (a la the movie The Day After Tomorrow) are all wrong.

"We missed what was right in front of our eyes," says Prof. Russell. It's not ice melt but rather wind circulation that drives ocean currents northward from the tropics. Climate models until now have not properly accounted for the wind's effects on ocean circulation, so researchers have compensated by over-emphasizing the role of manmade warming on polar ice melt.

“But, when Profs. Toggweiler and Russell re-jigged their model to include the 40-year cycle of winds away from the equator (then back towards it again), the role of ocean currents bringing warm southern waters to the north was obvious in the current Arctic warming.”

I have also heard reports that Earth’s overall temperature gain/loss has actually been cooler over the last 10 years. Hmmmm? Might want to check it out and for sure, don’t put all your “save the earth” eggs in one “man made global warming basket.”
