

“Obama’s Rhetoric”

I’m afraid Sen. Obama just doesn’t get it. I was reading comments he made after the horrific attack by terrorists on 9/11 and how we should handle the terrorist situation and what the systemic cause may be. It is obvious that this man is totally ignorant of what’s really going on in the world, and just as obviously, as a Christian he seems to be lacking in knowledge about what the Bible says about the ways of Christians, Jews, and Muslims. Let’s look at the brilliance in his words.

“We must also engage, however, in the more difficult task of understanding the sources of such madness. The essence of this tragedy, it seems to me, derives from a fundamental absence of empathy on the part of the attackers: an inability to imagine, or connect with, the humanity and suffering of others. Such a failure of empathy, such numbness to the pain of a child or the desperation of a parent, is not innate; nor, history tells us, is it unique to a particular culture religion, or ethnicity. It may find expression in a particular brand of violence, and may be channeled by particular demagogues or fanatics. Most often, though, it grows out of a climate of poverty and ignorance, helplessness and despair.”

What kind of drivel is he delivering and why doesn’t he attack the real reason head on so the ‘change’ he preaches might come a little sooner. Unless one attacks the root cause of a problem there will always be a problem. Unless one applies the medicine to the real hurt the hurt will always remain. The problem Sen. Obama is not poverty, helplessness and despair...the problem is hate, hate, and more hate for a people who do not think as they do. The problem, Sen. Obama is a fanatical world religion that has sworn to one-day rule the world. Understand I’m not saying to occupy the world, but rule the world, by any means available. The problem is, Sen. Obama, that these particular demagogues and/or fanatics are an organized army of well financed soldiers who believe an ideology that tells them it is not only permissible to kill, but necessary to kill, anyone who refuses to believe as they do and be rewarded for it, especially if they die in the doing of it.

This Polly Anna type verbiage he is constantly spewing to the American people is dangerous to all who believe in his theory of man being inherently good and ‘everyone’ should be given the benefit of the doubt and given the opportunity to sit down and discuss ways that we can co-exist in the world. The problem is, Sen. Obama, that these radical Islamists don’t want to co-exist with anyone who believes differently than they do and have been given permission by their “holy word” to lie to anyone about anything that will further the cause of Islam. To sit and talk with them and offer concessions to them would be looked upon by them as weakness and would allow them to dupe us into believing they are going to change their ultimate goal... an Islamic dominated world. Mr. Obama, and you who agree with him, to believe otherwise is idiocy at best.

Folks, I personally would like to be able to genuinely like Barack Obama. I would. But to like someone, one must know someone. Nobody knows who or what Barack Obama is or what he truly believes about anything and the more I read about him and his past I become more uneasy. To look at his family roots and ideologies under which he has been schooled... it is no wonder he was voted the most liberal Senator in the U.S. Senate. It is obvious that the majority of voters in WV sense the same uncertainties I do because they defeated him soundly in the primary.

I took a brief poll among some golfing buddies recently an 11 out of 12 said they would not vote for Obama under any circumstances. When I asked the lone affirmative voter why he was voting for Obama he couldn't tell me any specifics, just that "He (Obama) promises change." What change I asked. No answer. Someone then suggested that neither candidate is probably telling the truth about how he really believes, but saying only what the voter wanted to hear to get elected. I then asked everyone to describe each Senator and what was one word or phrase they would use to describe each. For Obama there were basically three brought out..."Ultra Liberal," "Big Government," "Inexperienced," and "Higher Taxes." For McCain several were given... "Maverick," "Rebel," "No Pork Allowed," "Experienced," and "Safer."

I then asked one last question but told them I didn't want an answer, but to think about their answer before they voted in November. The question was.... "Assuming each candidate is lying about his true beliefs and is shifting his stance to just attract voters and get elected. And, assuming that once either one is elected he will revert back to his true beliefs that he exhibited as a Senator... evidenced by his previous votes on critical issues in the Senate... which Senator would you think would be the one you would want to be your President and hold the most powerful office in the world."
